Red Fleet State Park

STATE PARK

RED FLEET

Hike to 200-million-year-old dinosaur tracks, boat and fish on Red Fleet Reservoir, and camp or picnic in a campground overlooking a sandstone and desert landscape. Fish for large-mouth bass, bluegill, rainbow and brown trout. Red Fleet is a destination in itself and a great location for discovery of Dinosaurland.

The park name was inspired by three large sandstone outcrops jutting up from the water as if a fleet of ships. Comprised of two formations, the bow and deck of the "ships" are formed by the Chinle Formation, with the upper turrets composed of Nugget Sandstone.

Red Fleet Dinosaur Tracks

Two hundred million years ago, this area looked like the Sahara Desert. Like the Sahara, the area had oases of shallow desert lakes called playas. Dinosaurs journeyed to the small playas among the dunes. We know this from the tracks they left behind in the wet sand. Hundreds of dinosaur tracks now lay exposed in the Nuggett Sandstone.

A three-mile, round-trip trail leads to the dinosaur track site. The hike covers varied terrain and is strenuous with a lot of uphill and downhill segments. Best viewing of tracks is early morning or late afternoon. Tracks are difficult to see when the sun is directly overhead.

Disturbing or removing rock from this area is prohibited. Please leave the dinosaur footprints for other visitors to enjoy. Report any vandalism to a park ranger.

To reach the tracks, travel north one mile on Highway 191. Turn right at the sign and drive 2.3 miles to the trailhead. Take drinking water.

Plants and Animals

Juniper, sagebrush, native grasses, and cactus dominate the area. Red Fleet is also home to mammals such as rabbits, ground squirrels, bobcats, badgers, coyotes, and mule deer. Golden eagles can be seen sunning themselves on sandstone cliffs. Other birds include magpies, mountain bluebirds, pinion jays, hawks, vultures, owls, and an occasional osprey. Bald eagles visit the area during winter months.

Things to Do

Local boaters refer to the 750-acre Red Fleet Reservoir as Little Lake Powell. Spectacular sandstone cliffs and secluded sandy beaches await. Boating, waterskiing, and swimming are popular activities during summer months. Swimmers should use caution, as water may be extremely deep just off shore. Jumping or diving from rocks or cliffs is prohibited. Canoe and kayak rentals are available at the park.

Red Fleet Reservoir is one of Utah's prime fisheries. Particularly noteworthy are rainbow and brown trout, bluegill, and largemouth bass.
