

Plants and Animals:

While wild horses no longer roam the mesa top, Dead Horse Point is home to a variety of wildlife and vegetation. From the microorganisms in the soil and our desert potholes to our much larger mammals and trees you are sure to see life in the desert during your visit to Dead Horse Point. With limited rain each year the plants and animals have learned to adapt. Many of the plants have learned to maximize water gain, while other will go dormant in times of drought. With the help of biological soil crusts the plants are able to take root in the ground. This soil is living and can take hundreds of years to develop. The animals in the park have learned other ways to adapt. Many will wait until the cooler temperatures of nighttime to hunt and forage for food. Others will travel for miles from one water source to the next. Survival in the desert is a delicate balance so please be respectfully of the plants and animals you encounter on your visit.

Geology:

This sedimentary rock wonderland that you see here has been going through changes for millions of years. Each rock layer you see tells a different story of what this land use to be. With the help of erosion and the ever-cutting Colorado river these layers continue to show and teach us what life use to look like in this ever changing part of the Colorado Plateau.

The Legend of Dead Horse Point:

According to one legend, the point was once used as a corral for wild mustangs roaming the mesa. Cowboys rounded up these horses and herded them across the narrow neck of land on to the point. The neck, which is only 30 yards wide, was then fenced off with branches and brush, creating a natural corral surrounded by precipitous cliffs. The cowboys then chose the horses they wanted and for reasons unknown, left the other horses corralled on the waterless point, where they died of thirst within view of the Colorado river 2,000 feet below.
